The three layers

Nobody in the audience is told any of this. They absorb it in the first twenty seconds.

DRAWN

Everything imagined

Pencil on warm cream paper. The factory inside the muscle, the hall of tanks, Coach Brain, the lever. This layer is the explanation, the model people built in their heads to make sense of the body.

LIVE ACTION

Everything true

Manan. Real skin, real hoodie, real hands, photographed against grey and placed inside the drawings, casting a real shadow onto the paper. This is the evidence, and the person who came to look.

THE BOOTH

The film being made

A dark room, a music stand, a microphone, one warm light behind him. He is a silhouette and the only lit thing in frame is the page in his hands. A shadow, reading, which is exactly what a narrator is. It opens the fourth wall: for a few seconds we are behind the film, in the room where a boy is making it.

The booth shots are cutaways, three or four across the film, dropped in when it wants you to remember somebody is telling you this.

What changed from version two

The format

Fifty composite shots became a moving comic strip. Characters speak in bubbles instead of being animated. No lip sync, no walk cycles, no character animation.

The script

Cut from 311 words to 192. Where the picture already said it, the voice stopped saying it. The chalkboard writes the chain, so nobody narrates the chain. The stamp reads CASE CLOSED, so nobody says case closed.

The silence

There are now 25 frames with no words at all. In version two the film was 157 seconds of speech in a 120 second film, which was impossible.

The bubbles

Every bubble is also spoken aloud, so nobody has to read anything on screen. The character voices are cast, directed and already recorded.

The booth

A new setup and a new layer. See the previous page.

Delivery

Artwork arrives finished and in separate layers: background alone, each character as a transparent PNG, bubbles empty so the font is yours, and a placeholder marking where Manan goes.

The shooting day

A Grey backdrop, walking and reacting

Eye level on sticks, locked off. Soft key from camera left at forty five degrees. Fill from the right at half strength. Frames 1.5, 1.6, 2.6, 3.2, 3.3, 3.4, 3.6.

B Seated eyeline, reacting to Coach Brain

Same lighting as A, unchanged. Tennis ball on a stand at seated height, camera left. Do not relight, only move the mark. Frames 4.2, 4.7.

C White void, still, to lens

Flat even light both sides, no modelling, no shadow on the backdrop. Frames 7.3, 7.6, 8.1, 8.3, 8.5, 8.6, 8.7.

D Jump, high frame rate. Optional, five minutes.

Same as C, wider, room above his head.

E His room, at his desk

Warm window light, no lamps fighting it. Frames 2.3, 4.5, 5.4.

F His room, at the blackboard

Same light, standing. A real blackboard, shot completely clean. Frame 2.1.

G His room, on the stationary bike

Same light. Wide, closer, close. Frames 5.6, 5.7, 5.8, 5.9.

H THE BOOTH. New.

A small room made dark. Music stand with the script pages, microphone on a stand, headphones. One warm light low and behind him, everything else falling away. He reads as a silhouette and the page in his hands is the only lit thing. His face does not need to read. Three or four shots.

EXT One quiet road, early morning

Riding hard, side on. Thirty minutes. Frame 5.5.

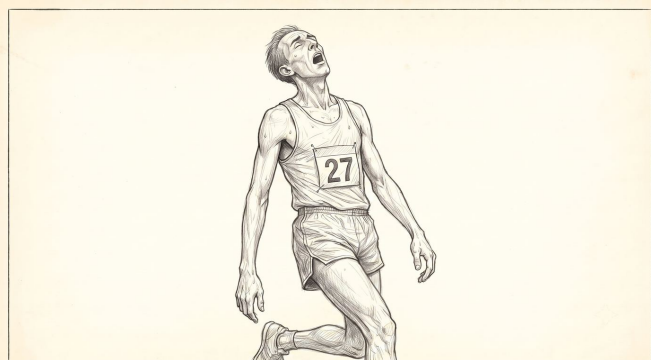

PROPS

Neutral mid dark grey background, about hex 3A3B3D, matte, one stop darker than his hoodie, and he stands at least a metre and a half in front of it. Tennis ball on a stand. Brass magnifying glass. A real blackboard and white chalk. A stationary exercise bike. A bicycle and a plain dark helmet. A small gold key. A ball at chest height for the lever insert. His own phone and laptop. Music stand, microphone on a stand, headphones, printed script pages.

WARDROBE

Grey hoodie everywhere, except on the stationary bike where he is in a plain dark t shirt. He rides the road in the hoodie, comes back sweating, takes it off. Plain mid grey, no logos.

THE LAST FRAME BUT ONE · then the sheet goes blank

*Everything collapses into one plane. The drawn boy breathing, the two theories ghosted at the edges, and the real boy's shadow reading it into being.
The sentence is hand drawn, because everything explained in this film is drawn.
Then the sheet goes blank, and we are back at the beginning.*
